What were the areas of conflict between the Bengal Nawabs and the East India Company?

Solution:

In the 18th century, after the death of Aurangzeb, the Bengal Nawabs asserted their power and autonomy. Through the eighteenth century, the conflicts between them and the East India Company intensified.

The Nawabs refused to grant the Company concessions. Demanded large tributes from the Company. Denied the Company from the right to mint coins. Stopped it from extending its fortifications.

They claimed that the Company was depriving the Bengal government of huge amounts of revenue. Undermining the authority of the Nawab.

Refusing to pay taxes, writing disrespectful letters, and humiliating the Nawab and his officials.

Enlargements of settlements by the Company. Buying villages.

Rebuilding forts.

On the other hand, the Company declared that its trade was getting ruined because of the unjust demands of the local officials. It believed that trade could only flourish if the duties were removed. To expand trade, it wanted to enlarge its settlements, buy up villages, and rebuild its forts.

- (ix) According to his title Collector, his main job was to collect the revenue and the taxes and maintain law & order in his district with the help of judges, police officers and darogas.

Question 8:

Describe the changes that occurred in the composition of the Company's army?

Solution:

During the eighteenth century, when the East India Company began recruitment for its own army, it started recruiting peasants and began training them as professional soldiers.

The army was known as Sepoy army.

Like the Mughal army, the Company's army was also composed of the cavalry and the infantry regiments, with the cavalry dominating the army.

However, as warfare technology changed during the nineteenth century, the cavalry requirements of the Company's army declined. The soldiers had to be armed with muskets and matchlocks, thus the infantry regiments became more important.

The British developed a uniform military culture. The soldiers were subjected to European style training, drill and discipline that regulated their life more than before. Caste and community feelings were ignored.
